MANAGER'S COMMENT:

In February 2025, US Treasury (UST) yields fluctuated amid mixed signals from inflation prints and shifting fiscal policy expectations under the new administration. February resumed volatility from the previous month with the UST10Y climbing to 4.79% to start of the month as markets priced in for less interest rate cuts (for 2025) after the hotter inflation print at 3.0% year-on-year (YoY) in January 2025. The UST10Y yield subsequently traded to a low of 4.42% (lowest since December 2024) in Mid-February as the January Producer Price Index (PPI) was released at 0.4% Month-on-Month (MoM), signalling market's expectation towards a softer Personal Consumption Expenditures (PCE) price index to be released in March.

With fewer expected rate cuts the USD has shown resilience and may stay strong despite the noises in the near term. We still think that the safe-haven status of USD will be a good hedge against tail risks arising from geopolitical tensions and the US trade protectionism policies. Considering the interest rate and currency volatility, we aim for a portfolio duration of 3 years.
